In 1850, one of the first national women’s rights conventions, The Ohio Women’s Convention, was held in Salem, OH.

At the time of the convention, women were denied the right to hold public office, vote, or participate on juries. This convention addressed suffrage: women’s right to vote.

It was not until August 26th, 1920, that American women won the right to vote with the passage of the 19th Amendment.
