

Nowhere is it ordained that history moves in a straight line.

Kent State University's History Department faculty specialize in American, European, African, Latin American, Asian and Medieval history, and offer courses that range widely across the chronologic, thematic and geographic sweep of humankind's existence. Introductory lecture courses prepare students for the challenges of living and working in the global community of the twenty-first century. Upper-division courses — including a research-intensive Senior Seminar — provide students with challenging perspectives on a variety of topics, and provide them with the means to sharpen their reading, research, critical thinking and writing skills.

Kent State University's graduate program in history offers two degrees: the Master of Arts and the Doctor of Philosophy. In addition to a traditional M.A. degree, students can pursue concentrations in public history and history for teachers. General inquiries regarding graduate study in history should be directed to the department's graduate coordinator, Professor Mary Ann Heiss (mheiss@kent.edu).

Barack Obama

For more information about the Kent State Department of History, visit our website or contact us at:

www.kent.edu/cas/history

330-672-2882

305 and 321 Bowman Hall

history@kent.edu

KENT STATE UNIVERSITY
EXCELLENCE in Action

Design: Glyphix kentglyphix.org